Powered Catamaran

The powered catamaran market was valued at US$ 63.7 million in 2016 and is projected to reach US$ 849.3 million by 2023, exhibiting a CAGR of 3.7% during the forecast period.

The debut of the power catamaran is the result of recent design developments such as configuration fills in specialized powered vessels, where speed and sea friendliness are preferred over bulk capacity. It combines the qualities of a motor yacht with the traditional sailing capabilities of a multihull. These catamarans have a low clearance and are substantially faster and have a longer range than traditional catamarans.

Power catamarans have several advantages over traditional catamarans, including more space per length, faster speeds with less expensive engines, and lower fuel usage. Daggerboards or centerboards, deeper rudders, reduced windage, and smaller displacement are common features of high-performance cruising catamarans. In practically all situations, these can go to windward at a 45-50 degree TWA. Speed and sea-friendliness are prioritised over bulk capacity in propelled vessels. This niche favours vehicle ferries and military vessels for patrol or operating in the littoral zone in larger vessels. The small-waterplane-area twin hull (SWATH) and the wave-piercing arrangement, the latter of which has become a popular design, are two improvements over the traditional catamaran.
