

Space Force Journal celebrates year two on the 64th anniversary of Explorer 1 launch

WASHINGTON, D.C., UNITED STATES, January 31, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ --

The Space Force Journal (SFJ) celebrated its second year of providing an independent forum to advance the professional, literary, and scientific understanding of spacepower and issues critical to American strategic leadership and dominance in space.

The Space Force Association (SFA) established the SFJ as an independent and professional intellectual platform. The anniversary date coincides with the launch of the first U.S. satellite, Explorer 1, launched into space (January 31, 1958) four months after Sputnik 1 became the first satellite to orbit the Earth. Explorer 1's mission was a critical milestone in the early days of the space race with the former Soviet Union. The Space Force Journal launched on this date in 2020 to honor this important day in history and its impact on space exploration.

The logo for the Space Force Journal. It features the letters "SFJ" in a large, bold, black, stylized font. To the right of "SFJ" is a black arrow pointing to the right. Below "SFJ" and the arrow, the words "SPACE FORCE JOURNAL" are written in a smaller, black, sans-serif font.

The Space Force Journal publishes accessible, original, and exciting works from authors who are diverse in background but united in their shared desire to explore emerging space issues freely. The SFJ explores the broad space topics that will help shape American and Allies' thinking about spacepower across commercial, civil, and national security space sectors.

As an independent voice of the Space Force, our volunteer editorial board seeks to include a broad spectrum of writings ranging from fully annotated research papers to historical analyses and cutting edge thought pieces, written by members of the space community of any rank or seniority, scholars, enthusiasts, and international partners. The SFJ welcomes submissions for editorial board approval.
