"We of the Church believe that all men* of whatever race, color or creed were created with equal rights."

The Scientology Information Center housed in the historic Clearwater building with its gallery of displays, video screens and information panels. The center is open daily.

This Creed is demonstrated throughout the Center's interactive exhibits on L. Ron Hubbard, the founder of the Scientology religion, the humanitarian programs that grew out of his philosophy, the beliefs and practices of Scientology, and videos of thousands of Scientology Churches, missions and groups spanning the globe.

We of the Church believe that all men of whatever race, color or creed were created with equal rights.”

L. Ron Hubbard, founder of the Scientology religion

American L. Ron Hubbard lived in Africa in the 1960's. While in the Southern African nation of Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe), Mr. Hubbard wrote a constitution calling for universal African suffrage - an appeal for what he described as "One Man - One Vote" regardless of race, color or creed. White supremacist, and prime minister of Rhodesia, Ian Smith, responded by not extending Mr. Hubbard's visa.

In the meantime, African Americans were coming into their own awareness of their rich history and culture. Historian and African American Carter G. Woodson, born in 1875 to former slaves, had made it his life's work to advance an uplifting history of the descendants of Africans in America. He successfully pushed for a period of time annually for Americans to honor and celebrate Black History. A week in February for such a celebration was extended to the entire month in 1976.

Today, we look around in America and have come to finally celebrate and honor African descendants for helping build America and for inspiring people all over the world through voices of passion, strength and truth.

Manager of the Scientology Information Center, Amber Skjelset, welcoming guests to the center's community board room, housed in the historic Clearwater building. The center is open to the public daily.
