Top impacting factors: market scenario analysis, trends, drivers, and impact analysis

Increase in demand for craft beer among the premium drinkers and the millennial is strengthening the market base for black beer production. Over the period of time, a large number of local breweries have emerged that propels the production of black beer, which is commonly processed in microbreweries. The presence of distinctive taste and uncommon flavors is shifting the consumer preferences from regular, standard beers to these unique flavored craft beers. In addition, rise in disposable income along with rapid urbanization is driving the demand for fermented drinks and alcoholic beverages in the market, which ultimately leads to an upsurge in demand for black beer.

The global black beer market trends are as follows:

New product launches to flourish the market

Black beer is a well-known type of craft beer, which is processed both in microbreweries and in large corporate breweries. Black beer is made up of medium-roast malts, with flavoring agents varying from coffee, nuts, chocolate, caramel, and other flavors. These can be put in beer as per the choice of brewers or as per the demand of customers. This highlights the highly customized attribute of black beer.

Change in consumer preferences from regular beer to black beer is majorly attributed to the addition of distinctive unique flavors, which attract a large consumer base towards the beverage industry. These new offerings in the market is boosting the pace of growth of global black beer market, and is anticipated to expand in the coming few years.

Distribution through off-trade and on-trade channels

Distribution channels play a vital role in the sale and disbursement of any product, and when it comes to the food & beverage industry, the platforms of distribution are broadened and diversified to ease the supply and enhance the market availability of the product.

Black beer is distributed through off-trade and on-trade channels. The off-trade channels include the supermarkets, hypermarkets, convenience stores, kiosks, wine shops, and other retail outlets, where black beer can be easily stored, served, and sold in kegs, bottles, or cans. The on-trade distribution refers to the supply of black beer in hotels, restaurants, bars, and cafeterias, which act as the mediators in the sale of fermented drinks. These specialized distribution channels are boosting global demand for black beer.
