Drivers:

High prevalence of chronic pain is expected to augment the growth of the global opioids agonist drugs market over the forecast period. For instance, as per the American Legislative Exchange Council, over 100 million Americans suffered from chronic pain in 2015, which is significantly more than the number of diabetics in the United States.

Moreover, government regulations to reduce the number of deaths due to opioid overdose are expected to boost growth of the global opioids agonist drugs market. Research organizations and market players are also focusing on developing novel opioid applications.

Restraints:

Drug abuse is expected to hinder growth of the global opioids agonist drugs market during the forecast period. Overdose of opioid pain relievers can be fatal. For instance, as per the National Institute of Drug Abuse, there has been a significant increase in deaths related to drug overdose involving prescription opioid painkillers and various federal and state laws have been enacted to contain this epidemic.
