LONDON, GREATER LONDON, UK, February 4, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ --

Federal funding for social services is a major driver for the community food, housing, and relief services market.

Funding from the government helps many homeless people get shelter.

Many programs are run by different countries to provide assistance to homeless people. For instance, in the US, every year the Federal Government allocates funds to States/Territories to support social services for vulnerable children, adults, and families through the Social Services Block Grant (SSBG). In India, 'Pradhan Mantri Gramin Awaas Yojana' focuses on providing permanent houses with basic amenities to homeless families. The objective of this scheme is to build one crore home of 25 sqm by 2022. Similarly, the government of India launched the Shelter for Homeless program under the National Urban Livelihood Mission (NULM). Under this program, various types of shelter, such as men shelter, women shelter, family shelter, and special shelter (for old age, mentally ill, sick persons) are provided. The government of India would finance 75% of the expense for the development of the shelters, while, 25% would be the State commitment. The Indian government is also working on providing rental housing to urban poor belonging to scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and other backward classes, migrants, transgender, and senior citizens. The increased federal funding will help contribute to the market for community food, housing, and relief services leading to its growth.
