Carmine Market

market to exhibit moderate growth during the next five years. Carmine, also known as cochineal extract, refers to a red or purplish-red pigment that is a coloring extract procured from the shell of the female cochineal insect. It is manufactured by precipitation and adding aluminum as well as calcium ions to the cochineal extract. Carmine is widely available in the powder, crystal, and liquid forms. It is commonly utilized as a food color to improve the flavor and appearance of the ingredient. Carmine is also used in cake icings, fillings, yogurt, gelatin, meat, processed foods, candies, ice-creams, alcoholic beverages, gelatin desserts, etc. Consequently, it finds several applications across numerous sectors, such as pharmaceutical, personal care, food and beverage (F&B), etc.

As the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis takes over the world, we are continuously tracking the changes in the markets, as well as the purchase behaviours of the consumers globally and our estimates about the latest market trends and forecasts are being done after considering the impact of this pandemic.

Market Trends:

The expanding F&B industry across the globe is one of the primary factors driving the carmine market. In line with this, the increasing utilization of carmine in bakery and confectionery items, soft drinks, jams, etc., is further catalyzing the market growth. Moreover, the escalating demand for colorants in the meat industry is acting as another significant growth-inducing factor. Apart from this, various product innovations, including the launch of vegan carmine that is widely utilized in ready-to-drink (RTD) beverages, jelly gums, and hard candy, are also positively influencing the global market. Additionally, the inflating investments in R&D activities aimed at developing cost-effective carmine extraction processes are projected to propel the carmine market in the coming years.
