Lithium prices have already more than doubled this year. The October reading for the lithium price index is up 225% year to date, according to data from Benchmark Mineral Intelligence.

The recently passed infrastructure bill includes $7.5 billion to build out the U.S.'s network of electric-vehicle chargers, which is expected to help speed up the adoption of EVs.

Lithium supply has been severely underinvested in the past few years, while demand is expected to grow exponentially throughout the decade as several countries set ambitious targets for EV sales.

Lithium demand was at about 300,000 metric tons last year and is expected to reach one million metric tons in 2025 and two million metric tons in 2030, according to S&P Global Platts.
