Born in the late '50s in Brawley, California, Pedro grew up in a big family. With four whole siblings and seventeen half-brothers and half-sisters, he is no stranger to big and modern families. Growing up, he and his family spent time in the Imperial Valley part of the state before moving to Tulare County. After completing high school, he joined the US Marines before moving on to become an ICE agent. A post he held until his retirement in 2006.

Even in adulthood, Pedro has embraced this progressive notion of families. With his first wife, he shares three children who gave him a total of eight grandchildren. From his second marriage, he has three stepchildren. From them, he is a step-grandfather of thirteen kids.

Siege at Rio Bend tells of the people and the travels that are loosely based on the author's experiences. With his many travels in the different parts of the world, readers will be taken along for the ride and learn of the many wonders various places have to offer. This, coupled with Pedro's active and rich imagination, the book is packed with action scenes that will surely put the readers at the edge of their seats.
