Prior to joining FON, Mr. Kowalczyk was the Chief Technology Officer of a Special Mission Unit within the United States Special Operations Command where he was responsible for current and future capabilities. Previously, Mr. Kowalczyk made significant contributions as a technology leader at various fortune 500 corporations and startups, including Verizon, Symantec, Intel, and Shiva. Some of his responsibilities included the growth of the engineering organization, product capabilities, and strategy. He brings a rare combination of skills and experience stemming from his strength in accelerated concept-to-market processes, efficiencies at the speed of technology change, and financial systems.

As both a warfighter and technologist, Mr. Kowalczyk embodies the ethos and core mission of FON Labs.”

David Walsh, FON Managing Partner

As both a warfighter and technologist, Mr. Kowalczyk embodies the ethos and core mission of FON Labs. By applying his vast operational experience

FON Labs supports the United States Government (USG) through Research, Development, Test, and Evaluation (RDT&E) of technologies for use by Department of Defense (DoD) and Intelligence Community (IC) customers. By fusing the technologist, the warfighter, and USG acquisition experts in the development process, FON has created a unique RDT&E process that successfully identifies emerging technologies that force multiply the capabilities for the customer.
