Students preparing for the ACT have to decide whether or not to opt for the essay section of the test. For those who do decide to go for it, another important question arises: How does one go about writing a persuasive essay? There are formulas for solving equations, but when it comes to essays, there are no guidelines. Or are there?

This is a book that inspires a person to think in a clear, coherent manner. That is not an easy thing, especially when a person is expected to expound on a controversial topic in a mere 40 minutes.”

Beth Cato, mother of an autistic child

“Essay-writing is both an art and a science. It’s one thing to have sample essays thrown at you, but when you have guidelines that teach you how to craft your own essay, that is an entirely different matter altogether”, says Deep Udeshi, Director, Vibrant Publishers.

“Winning Strategies for the ACT Essay was designed keeping this aspect in mind. Aimee brings her passion to coach and her experience as Graduate Pathway Advisor (George Mason University, Virginia) into this book. She acquaints the learner with her thought process and approach in creating an essay for the initial prompts, gradually giving them the space to develop their own ideas and ultimately, their own essay.”

Beth Cato, mother of an autistic child aptly expresses it: “This is a book that inspires a person to think in a clear, coherent manner. That is not an easy thing, especially when a person is expected to expound on a controversial topic in a mere 40 minutes. I read this book with my autistic son in mind: is this a book that I would buy him, to help him prepare? My whole-hearted answer is YES. I appreciate that this book is about more than developing skills that will help with ACT; the step-by-step advice on organizing thoughts to present an argument is a great life skill, period, to be used when writing or speaking.”

The book initially starts off by describing how the argument can be deconstructed and different perspectives to approach the prompt. The outline of the first few essays are laid out in detail, along with a sample essay that elaborates on the prompt. After that, students have the opportunity to come up with their own ideas for the rest of the essay topics. This style of presenting an essay has been liked by students and professors who’ve used the book. Cathy Colglazier, English Chair at McLean and TJHSST says: “Reading Aimee Weinstein’s Winning Strategies for ACT Essay Writing is like having a friendly and knowledgeable teacher sitting across the table talking just to you. Her explanations are clear, well-organized, and phrased in a lively manner that teens will appreciate. Particularly helpful are the 15 example essays with Aimee’s markings and comments.”

MidWest Book Review quotes, “Winning Strategies For ACT Essay Writing: With 15 Sample Prompts” is suitable for use with or without a tutor. By reading and practicing with this text, students will gain the tools and confidence to write a high scoring essay.”

Dr. Weinstein’s book assists all types of learners with the effective presentation of graphic charts and marked essays. Winning Strategies for the ACT Essay has won the hearts of students, tutors

DECONSTRUCT THE ARGUMENT

PROS

Schools Can Show Advertisements.

1. The money schools raise from ads is crucial to funding programs and events.
2. The local businesses that support the schools create community morale.
3. If students need a product or service advertised in school, then they can support businesses that support their school.

Schools Should Not Have Ads.

1. The ads might be for products or services that are not good/healthy for students.
2. The ads might be for products or services the parents do not support.
3. The ad revenue might go to programs or events the school does not actually need.

CONS

From here, you should write a thesis statement that looks something like this:

"Allowing local businesses to advertise their products and services in schools is a good way to generate revenue for the school but parents should have a say in deciding precisely which companies get to market to their children."

OUTLINE

Introduction and thesis statement

Tip: Hook with a comment about football or watching something on a screen in a school.

Topic sentence

The money schools raise from ads is crucial to funding programs and events.

Tip: Schools with underprivileged populations need extra funding and this is one way to help get it - mention specific clubs like the Model UN club that wants to travel or body needed new band uniforms.

Topic sentence

If students need a product or service advertised in school then they could support businesses that support their school.

Tip: Be as specific as possible! Perhaps the local hardware store advertises in the school as if a parent needs something, they will frequent that particular shop that supports the school.

Counter argument topic sentence

While advertising in schools generates revenue, it can also promote products that parents are not comfortable exposing their children to, so parents of students in the school should vote on whether the product is appropriate or not.

Tip: Continue to be specific - some parents do not want their children to see ads for sugary snacks, but the school receives money from snack companies, so they place the ads. The money is too good to turn down, but parents might be upset.
