Latin America Animal Feed Market Report

Animal feed is an edible material made with high nutritional products, such as hay, silage, legumes, and sprouted grains, for maintaining the healthy growth of livestock and poultry. It is a rich source of minerals, protein, fibers, acidifiers, enzymes, antioxidants, antibiotics, and carbohydrates. It is widely used across Latin America to improve life processes and maintain muscular activity among domestic animals, aquatic animals, ruminants, and swine.

As the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis takes over the world, we are continuously tracking the changes in the markets, as well as the industry behaviours of the consumers globally and our estimates about the latest market trends and forecasts are being done after considering the impact of this pandemic.

Latin America Animal Feed Market Trends:

In recent years, the cases of lifestyle-related metabolic diseases, such as obesity, hyperlipidemia, and diabetes mellitus, have increased in animals of the Latin American region. As these diseases can be transmitted to human beings, the increasing consumption of meat and other animal products and the rising awareness of food safety represents one of the key factors driving the market in the region. Apart from this, the growing consumer awareness about genetically modified organisms (GMO) is catalyzing the demand for healthier foods, which, in turn, is significantly influencing the adoption of non-GMO animal feed across the region.
