Western blot test is an antibody test that identifies immune system proteins, and it has been used since late 1970s. Using a conventional methodology, western blotting or immunoblotting can identify one or more particular protein antibodies in a sample. Western blotting is a reliable method for isolating antigens from a protein sample that is combined with other proteins. Antigens are foreign chemicals that stimulate the immune system. Western blot findings have high sensitivity and specificity, which means there are extremely few false-negative and false-positive results. In layman's words, high sensitivity yields correct findings from samples with illness evidence, and high specificity yields high rates in people who do not have this condition.

Factors such as technological advancements in AI and robotics, increasing innovations, growing need for high data security, large data management are fueling market development. Availability of variety of devices such as computers, smartphones, softwares and growing usage of internet is boosting overall growth of the information and communication technology. In addition, growing adoption of IOT and cloud based systems, increasing demand for technologically advanced devices, and change in consumer preference are some significant factors fueling market growth.

Competitive landscape of global Western Blotting market is quite fragmented with regional and global key players. They are often involved in various strategies including mergers and acquisitions, collaborations, new product launches or corporate deals to sustain their market position and expand their product portfolio.
