Boise State is hot off their 68-57 conference win against Utah State last weekend. They look to keep the momentum going as they face a San Diego State team that won the conference last season. The last time the two teams met exactly one month ago on January 22nd, Boise State secured a low scoring victory of just 42-37.

The Boise State Broncos will have a chance at the NCAA March Madness tournament if they clinch the Mountain West Conference Championship. So far, they have only lost 2 conference matchups out of 14, with an overall league record of 21-6. The last time Boise State basketball appeared in the NCAA bracket was spring of 2015, when they lost in the first four to the University of Dayton basketball.

Boise State Athletics is partially funded by sponsors and partners both locally around the Treasure Valley and nationally. One of those local partners being Meridian health company Microbe Formulas, who just began their partnership with the Broncos in the summer of 2021.

Dave Huffman, VP of Marketing at Microbe Formulas and former college basketball player, shares, "I usually prefer playing basketball to watching; however, this season's games, mixed with our partnership with Boise State athletics, gets me hyped. I'm excited to see how these next few games play out. Go Broncos!"

After the Broncos vs. Aztecs game tonight, Boise State will finish the regular season with three key conference matchups: starting with UNLV on February 26th, then Nevada on March 1st, and finishing off the season against Colorado State on March 5th.
