Food thickeners are food modifying agents that are added to an aqueous mixture to increase viscosity without substantially altering other properties like taste. They are usually obtained from plant sources that increase the bulkiness and consistency of the product by absorbing water present in the food item. Some of the widely preferred food thickeners are hydrocolloids, tapioca, arrowroot, gelatin, collagen, potato starch, cornstarch, sago, and xanthan gum. They are primarily used in sauces, desserts, puddings, and gravies to provide a consistent texture, improve the suspension of ingredients and enhance the stability of different dishes.

As the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis takes over the world, we are continuously tracking the changes in the markets, as well as the industry behaviours of the consumers globally and our estimates about the latest market trends and forecasts are being done after considering the impact of this pandemic.

Food Thickeners Market Trends:

The increasing demand for ready-to-eat (RTE) and convenience food products on account of rapid urbanization, changing dietary patterns, and inflating income levels of consumers represents one of the key factors driving the market. In addition, food thickeners are utilized to maintain the required texture of meat, poultry, and dairy-based food items. Moreover, the launch of innovative variants with enhanced organoleptic properties, ingredient emulsification, and palatability is creating a positive outlook for the market.
