Market Overview

According to the United Nations, the global population aged 60 years or over was numbered at 962 million in 2017 and is expected to reach nearly 2.1 billion by 2050. This rapidly growing geriatric population base is an indication of the growing prevalence of various age-related diseases such as cardiovascular diseases and others. For instance, over 130 million adults, or 45.1% of the U.S. population might suffer from some of the other forms of Cardiovascular disease (CVD) by 2035, as per the American Heart Association. This rise in chronic illnesses will eventually increase the patient pool leading to an increase in surgeries and hospitalizations, thereby raising the demand for surgical drapes.

Furthermore, the surgical drapes market is anticipated to grow on account of the growing technological advancement in the healthcare sector, increase in healthcare expenditure, and rapidly growing medical tourism industry across the globe. For instance, according to the Medical Tourism Association, nearly 14 million people around the globe travel to different countries in search of medical care per year. It is an activity worth between 50 and 70 thousand million dollars.

COVID-19 Impact

The recent covid-19 pandemic has disrupted the world and has brought a state of shock to the global economy. The global pandemic has impacted the healthcare industry and has transformed the way healthcare is delivered. The surgical drapes market has been significantly impacted during these times owing to the huge surge in COVID-19 patients across the globe leading to increased demand for surgical drapes globally.
