The increasing demand for robust security solutions is expected to drive the growth of the wireless intercom market in the coming years. The term robust security network is utilized in Wi-Fi networks to depict the security upgrades incorporated in the IEEE 802.11i and WPA (Wi-Fi Protected Access) 1 and 2 Variants. This set of protocols is designed to compensate for WEP's flaws (Wired Equivalent Privacy). The wireless intercom companies are focused on developing robust security solutions in intercom devices. For instance, in 2020, Swiftlane, a US-based Modern and Secure entry-management solution provider introduced Swiftlane Video Intercom. This system makes use of cloud-based technology to enable robust security access to a large common space that includes guest management, package management, and wireless access control. To open and enter the building safely, it uses smartphone credentials, face recognition, a key card, and a PIN code. According to TBRC's wireless intercom market overview, the increasing demand for robust security solutions propels the growth of the market.
