In Gray's debut novel, a young woman must battle her inner demons and deal with supernatural happenings while working at a New York morgue . . . a realistic look at the darker side of human nature.”

Kirkus Review

Gray also wrote and directed the Emmy-nominated “A Place for Annie” with Sissy Spacek and the Emmy-nominated mini-series “Haven” with Natasha Richardson and Anne Bancroft. His Indie feature, “White Irish Drinkers,” starring Stephen Lang and Karen Allen, premiered at the Toronto Film Festival.

Gray's prolific career as a writer and director also includes dozens of episodes of series across the broadcast and cable spectrum. His acclaimed short films have played and are playing in film festivals all over the world, including the Cannes Short Film Festival. His short film “French Kiss” has notched 6.3 million views to date on YouTube.

An early Kirkus review for “The Desecrated” said, “In Gray's debut novel, a young woman must battle her inner demons and deal with supernatural happenings while working at a New York morgue . . . a realistic look at the darker side of human nature and an otherworldly, fantastical account of the spirit world haunting the living . . . compelling horror story . . .”
