The Late Musician Was Recognized as a Major Contributor to the Music Industry during the NBA Team's Black History Month Campaign: "Our Community, Our History."

WASHINGTON, DC, USA, March 4, 2022

/EINPresswire.com/ -- On Friday, February 25, 2022, several Washington, DC, area musicians were honored by the Washington Wizards throughout their game against the San Antonio Spurs. Included in festivities was a posthumous tribute to the late District of Columbia native Chucky Thompson, who passed away on August 9, 2021.

Carl Edward "Chucky" Thompson was an R&B/hip-hop record producer who was best known for his work with Mary J. Blige, Notorious B.I.G., Faith Evans, and Nas, among several others. He was also a member of the "Hitmen," a team of in-house producers for Sean "Diddy" Combs's label, Bad Boy Entertainment.

In celebration of Black History Month, Friday's tribute was one of six home games where the Washington Wizards featured Black Americans and organizations that are direct products of the Washington, DC, metro area. The evening's theme was centered around musicians, performers, and those who have made lasting contributions to the music industry. Other artists honored alongside Thompson were Chuck Brown, Marvin Gaye, Duke Ellington, and rapper Wale. Fans enjoyed music videos and songs from the featured artists throughout the game. In attendance was Thompson's family, who were wearing customized t-shirts that they created in homage to "Chucky" and Guion Partners founder Lindsay Guión, whose company represents the estate of the late musician.
