

I Am a Sidewalk By: Matt MacGregor

Sidewalk: Your Concrete Buddy on the Road

TUCSON, ARIZONA, UNITED STATES, March 5, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Matt MacGregor wrote as a high school sophomore title, I Am a Sidewalk.

"The book begins by showing, through words and pictures, how concrete is prepared. Once the concrete is fixed as a sidewalk, a group of animals informs him that 'you are the start of trouble.' Indeed, the following pages show the area's burgeoning development crowding out the animals, who must find another place to live. The sidewalk nonetheless enjoys its role, surrounded by human activity all year long. Soar, the sidewalk's eagle friend returns to tell him that the road will expand, and the sidewalk is broken up. The book ends with the sidewalk ready to be recycled and happily put to use again." — Blue Ink Review.

"I was full of life's potential, for I did not know what I was going to be; a wall, a road, a porch, a footing, a bridge beam or a sidewalk."

"This is a great book for kids. It goes into detail about how concrete is made and shows different things about how concrete is made. The sidewalk character is easy to relate to and has cute illustrations!" — Amazon customer review.

Matt wrote this story in 1977 as a sophomore in high school. He picked the topic to get points for creativity and improve his chances for a better grade. In 2010, Matt asked his old friend Don Huff to help give him pointers. Don gave him some good ideas and encouraged him to continue. He was going to have his sons illustrate the story. Matt learned a lot during the process of turning the original homework assignment into a children's book. With the help of the people he loves, he learned about the power of friendship, with patience and persistence to make progress. This story is more than just a sidewalk journal. It is a reflection on life and speaks to that through the eyes of a sidewalk. This story is for all of us, not just our children. Read it and see what it tells you.
