“Aura” stands for Awareness, Understanding, Reflection, Action and the organization embodies these characteristics by providing a “learning place where children learn how to learn” according to founder Jagruti Gala. Gala and co-founder Shivani Joshi opened Aura in January 2008 and now provide assistance to 130 children from ages 6 to 13 who are enrolled in year-long enrichment programs. Aura focuses more on teaching children life skills rather than traditional academics, including lessons on basic hygiene, regional language writing and speaking, basic mathematics and other practical skills. Aura is free to enroll and relies entirely on donations from the local community and family and friends to cover operation fees.

As part of KMK’s ongoing corporate social responsibility program, the company’s mission is to improve the lives of patient’s as well as those of the people within their local communities. Thirteen KMK team members donated notebooks, pencils and pens as well as snacks such as apples and muffins to the children to help them through the school year.

Giving back as always been an important part of life at KMK, but has been increasingly difficult the past few years due to the COVID-19 pandemic. As regulations begin to ease and life shifts closer to a new normal, the team at KMK looks forward to being able to engage more with their local communities in these types of events.
