MGON Inc. has never lost sight of these commitments to these Health and Wellness product lines. These will be acquired, further developed and added to MGON Brand lines for retail and also introduced to partnerships for distribution and licensing.

Among other major goals that will set the course for the company, management has been in discussions for obtaining and renewal of past product lines from MGON. These lines consist of Fire Inhibitors and Antimicrobials for treated wood products (formerly known as RedShield), Fire-Gel for lithium batteries, an Organic Bedbug/Dustmite/Antimicrobial 90-day blend and other fire related products that management intends to mention in future news releases.

Also, regarding the MGON share structure CEO Robert Gardiner stated, "We were able to reduce our outstanding common shares by 19,500,000 and I am currently investigating with our corporate team of past issuances of our common stock. Since bringing the company back in good standing we have determined that some previous managements may have issued stock that might not have been valid, so I owe it to our shareholders to review the history of the company as we move it forward. Currently there is over 20 million more common shares in certificate form that are being reviewed to cancel with proper legal procedures."

CBD and COVID-19

In recent months, several CBD-focused companies have begun studies to determine if CBDs can be used to treat symptoms of COVID-19, which has infected nearly 21M worldwide. In the last two months alone:

- A study by Augusta University (GA) have completed animal studies suggesting CBDs could provide positive results for acute respiratory distress syndrome 1
 - A preclinical study by the University of Lethbridge in Alberta, Canada indicates a number of CBD strains could impact COVID-19 infections 2
 - The University of Nebraska and Texas Biomedical Research Institute have stated CBDs could treat lung infections in COVID-19 patients 3
 - The University of Maryland School of Medicine has established a lab specifically to study the effect of CBDs on COVID-19 as an anti-inflammatory 4
- OZONE and COVID-19

National Ozone Association (NOAI) released:

On March 12, 2020, the National Ozone Association (NOAI) released the following statement regarding ozone as an agent for killing the current strain of coronavirus: "[O]zone has been proven to kill numerous types of viruses. This includes previous versions of the coronavirus. Admittedly, treating the COVID-19 is yet to be proven for nearly every sanitizing product on the market. So, we are relying on the several past versions of SARS, Bird Flu, and MERS to support the belief that previous sanitizing methods will also sanitize the COVID-19 virus. ... Unlike treating mold, pest, or heavy odors; killing pathogens does not require a strong dose of ozone. Treatments of about an hour or two should be enough to kill bacteria and viruses on surfaces."

NOAI advises that "short ozone treatments are therefore easy to apply. Set the timer for an hour and spend a little time outside the house or building. Combine routine ozone treatments with proper cleaning and sanitizing already in place, handwashing, and controlling infection hotspots for maximum effect. " 5

The Stink Genie from MGON is a portable, multi-purpose product that compliments existing disinfectant protocols with the help of ozone, is made in the United States and is simple to use only requiring the user to: Plug In, Set Timer, Walk Away
