The purpose of the sanitation vehicles is for sanitation functions that do not involve moving the waste to a landfill or other disposal facility. In fact, this type of vehicle was created as a way to transport food from one location to another. For example, if a truck was needed to transport ice cream from a farm to a local restaurant, it would be large enough to carry the ice cream but also small enough to fit through a regular sized door, which is about the size of a standard van or even minivan window. This type of vehicle would also have a large bed that could hold many containers, and the height of the vehicle would allow for easy loading since it was not too high.

The outbreak of COVID-19 pandemic is expected to drive the growth of the market during the forecast period. This is due to the growing demand for sanitation vehicles during the COVID-19 pandemic. Due to these factors, sanitation vehicles are gaining demand to spray disinfectants on the streets and public areas. For instance, in February 2020, the Government of China dispatched a wide number of sanitation vehicles to spray disinfectants in the Wuhan region.

North America is expected to hold a dominant position in the global sanitation vehicles market owing to the growing need for sanitation vehicles in the region. According to the World Bank data, the waste produced in the North America region in 2016 was 289 million tons. The amount of waste generation is expected to increase over the forecast period. As the amount of waste is increasing day by day, the need for sanitation vehicles such as garbage trucks is also expected to increase significantly during the forecast period.

Moreover, Asia Pacific is expected to witness the fastest growth in the near future and this is attributed to the growing initiatives taken by various governments. For example, the government of India launched 'Swachh Bharat Abhiyan', a country-wide campaign for the period 2014 to 2019, to improve solid waste management in the rural and urban areas of India. Owing to the above-mentioned factors, the sanitation vehicle market is expected to witness significant growth during the forecast period.
