

Should a person should call the Ambulance after a Car Accident in Texas?

Charles Sanders Texas Car Accident Lawyer & "Worst Guest In Bravo Below Deck History" discusses using an ambulance for transportation after a Texas Car Accident

HOUSTON, TEXAS, UNITED STATES, March 24, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- An ambulance ride to the hospital is sometimes difference between living and dying in dangerous cases. However, it can be very expensive especially for people that do not carry health insurance coverage—If the ambulance has over 10 miles to drive to the nearest hospital? What is a person in this situation to do?

A person needs to be cognizant of the severity of their injuries in considering whether to call the ambulance after a Houston/Dallas/McAllen Texas Car Accident

This article address the issue of when it is appropriate for a person to forgo the ambulance ride to the hospital following a car accident and when a person should not refuse the ambulance.

if you could somehow avoid having to have the ambulance transport you to the hospital, I highly recommend. The reason for this is that most ambulance companies refuse to negotiate your bill down”

Charles K. Sanders

Symptoms people must be aware of:

Dizziness

Blurred Vision

Headaches

Shooting neck pain

Shooting back pain

These are certain symptoms that could indicate a grave underlying injury such as internal bleeding or hemorrhaging or herniated or budging disks that must receive immediate medical attention. Remember any unconscious person will be taken to the hospital without hesitation.

Who is going to pay the persons huge Ambulance Bill?

In the case that the car accident was not the persons fault, the other person that is at fault will have to cover any associated medical bills for injuries sustained in the crash. However even if the person is at fault for the crash, the person should not shy away from accepting a much needed ambulance ride to the hospital if the person is physically hurt. Also, a Houston Car Accident Lawyer might be able to negotiate a person's ambulance bill to a lower amount; however, most ambulance companies will not negotiate their bill.
