In the recent times, the emphasis has turned to leveraging customer success to generate income. This not only helps firms expand, but it also has the beneficial side effect of lowering revenue churn. Data-driven business has exploded in popularity over the last decade. The way the customers can be acquired and the use of data is influencing all aspects of the sales cycle, including customer success, due to machine learning and artificial intelligence. Data may be used to provide a real-time insight of client KPIs including MRR, ARR, and retention. Customer success teams can now understand when and how to reach out to their customers in the most proactive and helpful way. Essentially, the shift in emphasis to data-driven insights implies that customer success teams will be able to make better judgments in general, offering timely service and assisting consumers in avoiding last-minute problems.

Customer success training services are better equipped to monitor and map the customer's journey during and after the purchase process, as technology and data-based insights become more easily available, allowing them to give optimal message and assistance at each touchpoint. For instance, Practical CSM offers customer success training services, wherein the company works with the senior leadership team to understand the company's current customer success offerings. Moreover, they conduct workshops where they brief their senior executives on current customer success best practices, as well as an outline of all the essential aspects to address when building a customer success plan. The growing need across organizations to acquire a larger customer base is primarily driving the growth of global customer success training services market.
