Medical digital detectors are gaining widespread use and popularity in many clinical applications. Digital detectors vary dramatically concerning the technologies they use for the particular application, and their performance varies from system to system. The prominent players operating in the market are emphasizing on the expansion of their product portfolio to strengthen their position in the global medical digital detectors market. For instance, in November 2021, Konica Minolta Healthcare Americas Inc announced the launch of the mKDR Xpress Mobile X-ray System and the AeroDR Carbon Flat Panel Detector, which are powerful individually yet astonishing when used together.

These new solutions reaffirm the company's commitment to digital radiography by enabling clinicians to appreciate the greater potential with X-ray, the most widely available diagnostic imaging modality and often the first imaging test a patient receives. Currently, manufacturers are providing a variety of digital imaging solutions based on the various detector and readout technologies. Digital detectors permit the implementation of a fully digital picture archiving and communication system, in which pictures are stored digitally and are available anytime, which is projected to support the medical digital detectors market growth in the upcoming years.

The Covid-19 pandemic has turned the attention on diagnostic imaging, demanding a need for high-speed workflow and effectual patient management, and digital detectors can provide this fast turnaround. Pandemic brought about an uptick in demand for medical digital detectors market. In addition, digital detectors have the advantage of lower radiation dose exposure to patients and technicians. These factors are expected to drive the market's revenue growth during the pandemic period.
