W. Barry Nixon, the creator of the blog is a widely recognized expert on background checking is the co-author of Background Screening Investigations: Managing Hiring Risk from an HR and Security Perspective, founder of PreemploymentDirectory.com, and a past recipient of the coveted 'Most Influential People in Security' awarded by Security Magazine.

W. Barry Nixon, said, "the driving force for launching this blog includes creating another channel for suppliers to engage with background check firms in a non-commercial environment as well as to help background screening firms improve the candidate experience and to reduce the tension, anxiety, and sometimes animosity that applicants may have with the background checking process. We also want to help educate job seekers about the background screening process so that they not only are more comfortable with the process, but are better equipped to navigate it to help them get the job they want.'

We believe that each of the main stakeholders in the background checking process will benefit from the information provided and answers to key questions about background checks from industry experts.

We are putting special focus on our, Advice for Job Seekers because we believe that this area does not receive enough attention.

We hope to increase both the attention and value offered to job seekers by sharing expert information with them that:

- Increases their knowledge and understanding of the background check process,
- Answers key questions they have about background checks,
- Helps them to navigate the background check process as they experience it with the goal to make their job search a bit easier, and
- To reduce their problematic behaviors that give background check firms headaches by slowing down the background check process or otherwise interfering with it.

With this last point in mind, our initial research has shown that some of the top areas that background screening firms experience problems with job seekers include the following:

- Giving incomplete information
- Providing inaccurate information
- Providing false information

Our Employment Screening Advice Center provides an excellent opportunity for suppliers to the background check industry to set themselves apart and stand out by engaging with background checking firms about emerging trends, new technologies, processes, and approaches.
