The healthcare ecosystem is becoming increasingly connected over the recent past with rising integration of IoT-enabled medical devices, electronic health records (EHRs), and other advanced healthcare technologies that have provided platforms for cyberattacks. Cybersecurity incidents are a growing threat to the healthcare ecosystem, as healthcare institutions are technology-saturated and complex organizations having high endpoint complexity. Cyber vulnerability of hospital infrastructure in a country is affected by vulnerabilities in all individual healthcare facilities. With growing penetration of the internet, exposure of medical devices to new cybersecurity vulnerabilities has increased significantly. Growing incidences of ransomware attacks on hospitals and implanted devices and increasing data breaches and theft of sensitive data have further increased demand for robust cybersecurity solutions across the healthcare sector. This is expected to continue to drive market growth.

Growing adoption of connected devices across the healthcare sector has created various vulnerabilities in cybersecurity landscape of hospitals, which can compromise the integrity of patient data and impair medical device functionality. This has increased focus on improving cybersecurity solutions, which is a key factor expected to contribute to revenue growth of the market over the forecast period. However, high costs of advanced cybersecurity solutions, lack of skilled professionals to deploy security solutions, and vulnerabilities in cybersecurity platforms are some key factors expected to hamper market revenue growth over the forecast period.
