“DE&I represents a tremendous source of strength if we learn to use our differences to our advantage,” said Jason Lunday, Chief Learning Officer, Syntrio. “By tying diversity to business strategy, we inevitably increase performance, innovation and customer satisfaction.”

Diverse and inclusive strategies can have a positive impact on organizational cultures when they are supported by leaders who are transparent with their workforce and marketplace. Team members will be increasingly engaged by positive changes and organizations will attract more employees and customers.

“What we love about Syntrio is we can offer different ways of learning DE&I. Everyone learns differently and we have the best chance for success when DE&I is reinforced in multiple ways,” said Patricia Hartwell, Director of Corporate HR, B. Braun. “When I looked at Syntrio’s offerings, I was very impressed. It is clear that DE&I is at the heart of what the company provides.”

Syntrio’s multi-library curriculum includes hundreds of titles that promote, support and strengthen a diverse and inclusive workplace. It is designed to enable all organizations along their journey, whether the focus is enlisting leadership in a new DE&I launch, relaunching an initiative or engaging a workforce through a broad-based training and communications program.

Syntrio FlexCourse includes a modular structure that permits you to tailor a course to your specific needs, while eliminating the time and expense of a custom course. FlexCourse is highly configurable and you can leverage dozens of Syntrio modules to engage employees and encourage continuous growth and feedback. Two new series have also been released with this announcement: Introduction to Workplace Diversity, Equity and Inclusion, and Speak Up / Listen Up.

“Diversity is more than recognizing differences between race and gender and there is a significant gap between ‘valuing diversity’ and having the appropriate skills to collaborate effectively in a group of diverse people,” said Thomas O’Keefe, President and CEO, Syntrio. “We need to acknowledge our differences and practice inclusion, drawing on different cultures, talents and ideas to create a more respectful and productive workplace for all.”

This announcement follows the release of Syntrio Engage, the new employee experience platform that harnesses the power of global workforces by providing real-time employee feedback to help organizations reach new levels of employee engagement. Creating a highly engaged culture requires a commitment to raising employee awareness that supports organizational values of trust and inclusivity, and the heart of this platform is a suite of communication tools and resources, learning libraries and real-time analytics.
