A baby car seat, also known as an infant safety seat, booster seat, or baby restraint system is a specially designed seat for infants and children to protect them from injury or death while travelling through cars or vehicle collisions. There has been a rapid increase in adoption of baby car seats due to rising car accidents and increasing parent concerns regarding their child's safety. The basic idea behind manufacturing these car seats is to protect the child from falling and injuries until they are grown up enough to use inbuilt car seatbelts. However, care should be taken while deploying baby seat in car as it can also cause injuries or damages to the child if not installed properly.
