“Intelligence is based on how efficient a species becomes at doing the things they need to survive.”

Charles Darwin

This is the picture-perfect read for anyone who loves science fiction, fantasy, action, and adventure, genetic experimentation, and tales of survival. As a fan of the genre, it was revitalizing to see a story that supported the use of its multiple genres and while ending on a positive note, left some open-ended storylines open for possible other stories in the future. Arthur L. Woodring was born and raised in 1953 in Osceola Mills, Pennsylvania, is a retired injection molding specialist who took up writing as a hobby over thirty years ago and has published the books titled Gildor: The Forbidden Land Book 1 and The Princess and The Tyrant of Bazneelia. This is mostly for the enjoyment he finds in it and hopes his readers will continue to read his works for the same reason. There is a piece of good news for this book because the author is planning to continue parts 2 and 3 of the Gildor book.
