Noodle Station participates in Save the Food Fest

Food Waste Prevention Week is a dynamic week, chock full of engaging activities to raise awareness and inspire everyone to reduce food waste at home, at work, and in our communities.

Noodle Station, a Fort Lauderdale restaurant serving noodle bowls, bao, and beer, participated in the Save The Food event.

“We’re proud to be active in the community,” said Mitch Zelman, co-owner of Noodle Station. “People are what bring a community together and what better way to bring everyone together than serving great food and learning about ways to reduce food waste in the process.”

Noodle Station Co-founder, Walter Harris was in attendance and did a live chef demonstration showing kids how to reuse items in cooking instead of throwing them away.

The event raised tremendous awareness and inspired everyone to reduce food waste in their own homes.

More about Noodle Station

Noodle Station, located at 3045 N. Federal Highway in Fort Lauderdale, opened in January 2020 and has since become a favorite for local diners and celebrity food critics. In addition to being featured on the Food Network, the restaurant has been featured on Hungry Black Man, Josiah Eats, and Chase Creative on YouTube.

People are what bring a community together and what better way to bring everyone together than serving great food and learning about ways to reduce food waste in the process.”
