Using Trenchless Techniques for a Cleaner Sewer Line Replacement Process

Jones Excavating & Plumbing contractors forego the traditional methods of repair, which involve the removal of the old pipe from the ground before installing a new one and the use of minimally-invasive techniques to fix sewer lines.

Only needing small holes, trenchless sewer repair doesn't involve digging or using heavy machinery. Instead, new technologies are used to accelerate and smoothen the sewer replacement process. This process includes pipe-bursting, where the new pipe is extracted through the old pipe location, breaking up the damaged pipe along the way. Alternatively, this process also includes pipe relining, which requires only one access point to enter the defective pipe and the use of a strong epoxy to line the old pipe's interior with a new one.
