She continued, "In this show, we are going to look at what compels people to walk away from their careers and steady incomes by addressing the issues of perpetual trauma and depleted mental power."

In keeping with its goal to "empower organizations to transform workplace cultures that create belongingness for all people" the Mission DEIM virtual talk show will offer micro-solutions that can help workers, who have either left their jobs or have stayed under questionable conditions, heal from the ordeal. Business leaders will also be given ways to empathize with their departing employees and consciously move to a more inclusive work environment that enables new and existing employees to be mentally healthy, productive, empowered, and vested.

Quentin Anderson, Founder of BlackOwned.com added "I am excited to watch our Virtual Talk Show, Mission DEIM hit the airwaves because coming together to solve problems of equality and opportunity in American business (for example, only 2% of Fortune 500 companies are run by black women) starts with honest, inclusive, vulnerable communication and that's what this show is all about."
