The Full Story on Shared CUI Responsibility and Staying CMMC Compliant on The Virtual CISO Podcast

On The Virtual CISO Podcast, Caleb Leidy and host John Verry drill down into the critical questions that MSPs need to examine around CMMC compliance.

HAMILTON, NJ, USA, May 10, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Evaluating whether your MSP security environment meets CMMC compliance requirements can be pretty confusing—never mind the complexities of requirements "flow down" and the compliance impacts of sharing CUI across organizations. It really does take an expert to sort it all out.

> If your MSP business has any customers in the US federal government, or that serve the US government, consider this podcast a timely consultant briefing on this business-critical issue... minus the fee."

Fortunately, Pivot Point Security has just such an expert on staff: CUI Protection and CMMC Consultant Caleb Leidy.

On the latest episode of The Virtual CISO Podcast, popular "serial guest" Caleb and host John Verry drill down into the critical questions that MSPs need to examine around CMMC compliance for you and your clients.

Topics discussed include:

- What controls are MSPs responsible for in client environments?
- What controls are clients responsible for in their own environments?
- What controls might an MPS need to implement in its own environment to meet DFARS contract requirements around "flow down" of CMMC/NIST 800-171 compliance from clients?
- Top CMMC compliance "corner cases" you should be aware of

If your MSP business has any customers in the US federal government, or that serve the US government, consider this podcast a timely consultant briefing on this business-critical issue... minus the fee.
