Crovetti Jr, DO is proud to announce that Jennifer D'Andrea, APRN - Board Certified by the American Academy of Nurse Practitioners - has joined the professional medical staff of Crovetti Orthopaedics & Sports Medicine at both its Henderson and Las Vegas locations.

I've found that when patients take an active role in defining the changes they'd like to see in their health, they are far more likely and willing to adhere to their program.”

Jennifer D'Andrea, APRN

Jennifer D'Andrea's extensive experience began after earning her Bachelors of Science in Nursing from the University of the Virgin Islands, and her Masters of Science at Ball State University, Indiana. Starting out in emergency room and urgent care settings in Las Vegas and Seattle, she focused her talents early on towards Regenerative and Functional Medicine. Her intensive training in this area continued with Advanced Injection Techniques and the use of ultrasound in pain management to address joint, nerve, tendon, ligament, muscle, and orthopaedic conditions - treatments that include the use of hyaluronic acid, steroids, PRP (Platelet Rich Plasma Therapy), lovera, and other non-surgical regenerative therapies.

Ms. D'Andrea prefers to avoid the use of painkilling drugs when possible, and is an avid proponent of intentional listening - an approach that allows her to fully understand and acknowledge the pain issues and concerns of her patients, as well as the overall affect these conditions have on the patient's life and family. Prepared with this in-depth knowledge, D'Andrea then creates a highly personalized program to address their specific health needs, provide the tools they need to get started down the right recovery path, and help them stay on it to achieve their ultimate health goals.

As Ms. D'Andrea explains, “I've found that when patients take an active role in defining the changes they'd like to see in their health, they are far more likely and willing to adhere to their program. My role is to provide the knowledge, tools, and understanding of how best to reach those goals – and when coupled with their own personal motivation – the results are not only a better healthcare outcome for them physically, but an enhanced satisfaction with the journey they've taken to achieve it.”

During the past years, the Covid-19 pandemic caused changes in the medical field that led Jennifer D'Andrea to seek a new arena to better utilize her growing experience and passion in working with both sports medicine and geriatric patients. To her, that meant a straight line to working with Croveti Ortho.

“When I made the decision to find the perfect position that would utilize my experience and encourage more professional growth, I wanted to start at the top of the field. That’s why I began by reaching out directly to Dr. Croveti,” D’Andrea reveals. “I knew of his practice and more importantly his reputation in his field: how he is truly invested in the care of his patients, as well as being a champion for his staff. So I took a chance to contact him, which led to a great meeting, and the short story is that we sort of both accepted an offer that neither of us could refuse!”

Dr. Croveti agrees stating, “Jennifer D’Andrea’s role with Croveti Orthopaedics allows us to even better serve our patients, who are always our first priority. Not only will she be working with our doctors utilizing her experience with injections and pain management treatments, she will also handle our Pre-Operative Clearances in-house – saving patients the need to for additional outside appointments and testing. She will be involved throughout the entire process, providing yet another knowledgeable and helpful continuity of care for our patients. With Ms. D’Andrea’s experience and enthusiasm for her work, we know it’s going to be to everyone’s benefit at Croveti Ortho.”
