

Battlefield Earth: Four Decades □ Two Master Craftsmen

Letter of recognition honoring master craftsmen Frank Frazetta and L. Ron Hubbard presented by Frazetta daughter Holly Frazetta and granddaughter Sara Frazetta.

HOLLYWOOD, CA, UNITED STATES, May 11, 2022 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Just as master storyteller L. Ron Hubbard called Frank Frazetta the King of Illustrators and cherished his work, Frazetta long loved the tales by L. Ron Hubbard.

So it was that in 1982, L. Ron Hubbard commissioned Frazetta to capture the spirit of the novel "Battlefield Earth" on canvas.

And now, four decades later, both international bestselling novel "Battlefield Earth" and the iconic piece, "Man: The Endangered Species," are part of science fiction history.

On the opening day of the Frank Frazetta Museum at his home in Boca Grande, FL, earlier this year, his daughter Holly Frazetta and granddaughter Sara Frazetta presented a framed letter of recognition honoring the 40th anniversary. “In a fusion of creativity, a legendary author and an out-of-this-world artist created enduring masterpieces that will live on into the future.”

Attendees of the grand opening also saw the pre-release of a never-before-shown 7-minute interview with the legendary artist titled "Advice from a Master: Frank Frazetta." bestselling books, including the Lieutenant for "Final Blackout" and the Countess Krak for MISSION EARTH. Many of his paintings also graced the covers of earlier Writers of the Future volumes, fitting as he was one of the Illustrator Contest's first judges. A collection of fine art prints, numbered and signed by Frazetta, can be seen at The Frazetta Collection.

Frazetta wrote an article published in "L. Ron Hubbard Presents Writers of the Future Volume VII" titled "Frank Frazetta: An Introduction," where he stated, "You know, in an essay that ran in Volume Two of this series, L. Ron Hubbard said 'What is good art?... Technical expertise itself adequate to produce an emotional impact.' And if you realize that this washes out a vast amount of what's called 'art,' but isn't art, and if you realize this places a tremendous obligation on the artist, that's right. We all have our limitations ... but every once in a while, guys like me reach out and go far beyond what we accepted up until then as great and wonderful. Like the four-minute mile. 'Can't be done, can't be done,' we said for years. Then somebody does it, and suddenly everybody feels they can do it."
