The conversion of airport terminals into global gateways has aided the country's international tourism development, with approximately 95-99% visitors arriving by air. In recent years, the airports in Davao City and Iloilo City have been modernized, allowing direct charter flights from Singapore.

Meanwhile, Mactan-Cebu Airport, which has long handled both scheduled and charter flights from all across East Asia, was set to begin gaining long-haul flights in 2016 when three Philippine airlines began moving between Cebu and Los Angeles, California. Aside from that, the country's hospitality sector is increasingly focusing on the contactless payment trend. When contactless payments are allowed, customers save time by not trying to sort through cash or enter their PIN.

The introduction of mobile payments has also made carrying a wallet obsolete. The coronavirus outbreak has boosted the demand for contactless payments that reduce friction and improve the customer experience.

Offering contactless payment methods may be perceived as a need rather than a luxury by many customers and staff. As a result of the covid-19 outbreak, many people in the Philippine hospitality business have started to employ contactless payment systems.
