As the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) crisis takes over the world, we are continuously tracking the changes in the markets, as well as the purchase behaviors of the consumers globally and our estimates about the latest market trends and forecasts are being done after considering the impact of this pandemic.

Global Industry Trends:

On account of rising population across the globe, the demand for food production is observing an increase, resulting in the growth of the global seeds market. In addition to this, due to rapid urbanization, the availability of per capita arable land has declined. Nonetheless, with the advent of genetically modified (GM) seeds, farmers are now able to increase the efficiency of their farmlands as GM seeds have higher yield than non-GM seeds. This is anticipated to drive the demand for GM seeds worldwide. Moreover, as government of several countries are encouraging the application of biofuel, due to its environmental advantages, the demand for crops like soybean and corn is increasing, in turn, augmenting the demand for seeds of these crops. Further, propelled by economic growth and escalating disposable incomes, the demand for agricultural produce from both the food and non-food sectors has been increasing constantly in a number of developing markets, such as India, China, Middle East, etc.
