

Church of Scientology Nashville President Elected to Head the Religion Communicators Council

LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA, UNITED STATES, May 18, 2022

/EINPresswire.com/ -- At its 2022 national convention, Religion Communicators Council (RCC) elected Rev. Brian Fesler, pastor of the Church of Scientology Nashville, as president of its board of governors.

"I am excited and honored to serve with the distinguished members of the executive committee," said Fesler. "These people have dedicated their careers to forwarding religious and spiritual values with excellence. Supporting that work is what RCC is all about."

Religion Communicators Council was founded in 1929 as an organization for communications and public relations professionals, with membership open to those associated with Protestant denominations. In 1972, RCC opened membership to all religious faiths, which now includes more than 60 different faith-based institutions in the United States and abroad.

Past RCC president Nadine Monn said Rev. Fesler's "leadership on interfaith partnerships and dedication to communications excellence will be a benefit to our professional association as we continue envisioning what RCC looks like in the coming years."

In addition to his role on the board, Rev. Fesler served this year as coordinator of the DeRose-Hinkhouse Memorial Awards, honoring excellence in religion communication. This is the second consecutive year of his organizing 50 communications professionals to judge nearly 200 submissions from RCC members for awards involving periodicals, audiovisual publications, writing, artwork and design.

Fesler was treasurer on the Nashville Board of the Interdenominational Ministers Fellowship in 2014 and 2015 under the leadership of Rev. Dr. Judy Cummings, then pastor of New Covenant Christian Church (DOC). He is a fixture on the steering committee that plans Nashville's annual Martin Luther King Day march and convocation. He is active in interfaith work and community outreach programs including drug prevention and chairs the annual Tennessee celebration of International Human Rights Day.

"In this time of confusion, worry, and lack of social interaction, it is more important than ever for the religious community to reach its members and counsel those in need," said Fesler, "The RCC is vital to our world today. I look forward to working with the executive committee and board to further the RCC mission."
