semiprofessional houses with a chance at a spot on the professional team. In fact, earlier this year, Division 6ix announced @foallow as the first-ever Professional Fortnite Player!

While the world was at a standstill during the pandemic, this self-taught visionary pivoted to create an inclusive esports platform. Researchers report gaming jumped up 20 percent among 16- 25-year-olds during the global lockdowns, and Division 6ix is perfectly positioned to cultivate that new community of gamers. As a serial entrepreneur with a background in business management, Olu sensed this vast opening in the gaming world, and he and the team set out to fill the void.

Now the head of a growing gaming dynasty, Olu remembers their stark origin story where an inventive trio dreamed of changing the gaming landscape. Along with Kris Nguyen & Jean-Paul Gaitain, the team drafted Division 6ix in the lobby of local hotels. Today the sought-after platform is taking the U.K. by storm. In the beginning, only 12 people showed up for the first Division 6ix tournament, but Olu did not despise small beginnings. Within a month, their online fame grew, and now more than 1,000 people compete for the prize pool.

The goal of Division 6ix is to build a better cyberspace community where all races, genders, and ethnicities are invited to play. On this intuitive platform, “there are no pre-set requirements or fees to participate. Everyone at every level is given a fair chance.”
