Key Highlights from the Report

In February 2020, Royal DSM entered into the growing market of human milk oligosaccharides (HMO), taking over as the producer of recombinant 2'-fucosyl lactose, Danish Glycom A/S. The acquisition is expected to support growth of Glycom by adding its human milk oligosaccharides products to the broad global customer base of DSM and integrate it in its full solutions offering for infant nutrition customers.

Liquid segment accounted for largest revenue share in 2020. Higher activity and better functionality of liquid Lactase Enzyme makes it more preferred, which is expected to drive revenue growth of the liquid Lactase Enzyme segment.

Yeast segment revenue is expected to expand at a rapid CAGR during the forecast period. Technological advancements in Lactase Enzyme extraction process through yeast is expected to boost growth of the global Lactase Enzyme market during the forecast period.
