Plant-Based Beverages Market

Plant-based beverages or non-dairy milk alternative is the fast-growing segment in the newer food product development category of functional and specialty plant-based beverages across the globe. Cow milk allergy, lactose intolerance, calorie intake, and occurrence of hypercholesterolemia, more preference to vegan food has attracted the consumers towards looking for cow milk alternatives. Plant-based beverages alternatives are an emerging trend, which provides an adequate alternate where cow's milk supply is inadequate. Though various types of innovative beverages from plant sources are being exploited for a cow milk alternative, many of these face some/any technological issues, either related to processing or preservation. The majority of these plant-based beverages lack nutritional balance when compared to bovine milk; however, they contain functionally active components with health-promoting properties that attract health-conscious consumers.

Food consumption patterns have changed significantly in many industrialized countries in recent years. There has been an increase in the consumption of grain products, fruits and vegetables, and a decline in the use of flesh foods, especially red meats. Such changes have often been advocated because of their association with a reduced risk for certain chronic diseases. In young women, in particular, there has been an increasing trend towards adopting vegetarian-type dietary patterns for ethical, ecological, philosophical, and economic reasons as well as for their perceived health benefits. Adolescent women are also attracted to a vegetarian diet or including
