DSA is committed to the highest ethical business standards for the direct selling channel and to the customers our member companies serve every day. Our Code of Ethics is a robust series of policies that every DSA member agrees to follow as condition of membership. It holds member companies accountable to policies that protect independent salespeople and consumers and encourages the entire marketplace for direct selling to meet these high standards. For example, the Code prohibits statements or promises that mislead consumers or prospective salespeople and sets stringent guidelines for earnings representations, product claims, sales and marketing tactics and policies for order cancellations and returns. DSA members have strengthened the Code since its enactment in 1970 to ensure it stays relevant with changing stakeholder expectations

<https://www.dsa.org/>.

One of the hallmarks of our Code of Ethics is that it is enforced by an independent administrator empowered by DSA members to resolve issues. The Code Administrator can impose a variety of remedies in the event of a Code violation including calling for refunds, ordering a mandatory repurchase of inventory or other measures as needed. When media reports or other sources make the Administrator aware of allegations that could be Code violations, the Administrator may conduct an investigation into the practices of our members and suggest how issues may be resolved.

The Direct Selling Association: Direct Selling Association (DSA) is the national trade association for companies that market products and services directly to consumers through an independent, entrepreneurial salesforce. DSA serves to promote, protect and police the direct selling industry while helping direct selling companies and their independent salesforce become more successful. We started in 1910 as the Agents Credit Association by a group of representatives in Binghamton, New York hoping to resolve issues with agents unable to collect payments.

Today the DSA provides members various services from educational materials, access to industry research, networking opportunities, professional development, and other support programs. The DSA works with Congress, government agencies, consumer protection organizations and others on behalf of our nearly 130 member companies. One of the most pivotal roles the DSA plays is through the commitment to self-regulation and our Code of Ethics.

Mission: To protect, serve and promote the effectiveness of member companies and the independent business people they represent. To ensure member companies' products and the direct selling opportunity is conducted with the highest level of business ethics.

TRB’s believes in inspiring the community to improve their lives through authentic, honest solutions, more in-depth knowledge of natural wellness, and simple yet effective solutions for full-body health.

Roots Absorb Water, Minerals, and Nutrients: Trees need proper water, minerals, and nutrients for survival. How does a tree get these things? By absorption through roots. The roots absorb these directly from the soil and into the stem. From the stem, the water, minerals, and nutrients are then dispersed throughout the tree—into the branches, the leaves, any budding flowers on the tree, any fruit growing on the tree, and so on. This is also why it's critical to have healthy and correct soil for your tree to be planted in. Without this healthy soil, the roots won't be able to properly absorb the necessary nutrients that the tree needs. Unhealthy soil means unhealthy roots, which leads to an unhealthy tree.

Roots Store These Nutrients and Food: In addition to first absorbing the nutrients and food that the tree needs to survive, roots also store necessary nutrients and food for future needs. This is especially important during the colder, winter months, when nutrients tend to be less plentiful than in the summer. This storage by the roots is how trees survive the colder months. Because of the roots, the tree doesn't go hungry during this time and still gets the nutrients it needs to continue to grow.

Roots Harbor the Tree to the Ground: Why doesn't a tree go flying during gusty winds and big storms? It's because the roots of the tree act as an anchor, keeping the tree in place. The stronger the root system is, the harder it will be for the tree to uproot or move. This is important, as you don't want your tree to be the reason any damage is caused to your property, a neighbor's property, or worse, to anyone.

Roots Compete with Other Plants: Think of survival of the fittest as that applies to the roots of trees. Plants compete for nutrients and water, especially those plants that are planted in the same soil. The strongest will get these things the fastest and the most. If the roots of your tree are the strongest, then your tree will thrive more than any others. It's also important to have a strong and healthy root system. This will allow your tree to have adequate room to expand, as it won't let any other sort of weeds pop up and begin to grow above it. It will also ensure that there is enough space between trees to avoid any competition.
