About Tracy J

The Atlanta native is an emerging R&B artist, songwriter, and producer. During the height of the pandemic, he leaned into his creativity. Collaborating as executive producer with music veteran Seven Bailey [Kirk Franklin, Erykah Badu, Lauryn Hill] on a soundtrack for Robert Butler's feature film "Life Aint Like The Movies," starring Paul Bates [Coming To America] and Cynda Williams [Mo' Better Blues]. He released singles like "Right Here" & "These Games," produced by Wayne Matthews Jr. [Summer Walker]. Not to mention his sexy ladies' anthem, "Bad," produced by G White, Made It.

Navigating the industry, "Tracy J" officially became a trademark, and he received an invitation to the Recording Academy's Class of 2021. His incredible vocals have also landed him on stages doing background vocals for artists like Three-time GRAMMY-nominated gospel singer-songwriter Kierra "Kiki" Sheard. His transition to R&B doesn't exclude his classical training at Oral Roberts University and gospel music upbringing. Instead, he combines powerful, personal lyrics and quality production to create music that feels incredibly modern and appealing. He stays true to his artistry while maintaining the ability to connect with his audience and share genuine emotions.
