The mushroom market consists of sales of mushrooms by entities (organization, partnerships, and sole traders) that are engaged in producing widely edible fungi that are classified as vegetables. Mushrooms are commonly cultivated in a controlled environment with appropriate light, ventilation, humidity, soil pH levels, nutrients, and air pressure. Mushrooms are umbrella-shaped and are considered a superfood because of their nutritional contents, such as vitamin D, selenium, and glutathione. Its edibility can be described by absence of toxic effects on humans and desired taste and aroma.
