Viscose Fiber Market size was significantly robust in 2020 and is expected to register a steady revenue CAGR over the forecast period. Rising demand for household and medical textiles as well as expanding application scope in other industries such as automotive and construction are key factors driving market revenue growth. In addition to this, high demand for apparels due to increasing spending power of consumers around the world is expected to drive market growth.

Viscose staple fibers are cotton-like biodegradable fibers. Wood pulp and cotton pulp are used to manufacture these fibers. Viscose staple fiber is a synthetic textile created from viscose, which is obtained through cellulosic material degradation. It can be used to make fabrics for garments and household textiles in either plain or blended form. To boost the fabric's strength, shine, or elasticity, several textile makers combine viscose staple fiber with cotton and linen. Viscose is also used in medical textiles such as bandages due to its high wet modulus of elasticity, which allows these items to maintain their shape even after being stretched repeatedly.
