We Level Up holds Joint Commission Rehab Accreditation.

Finding not only quality care but the right treatment center for you or a loved one can be hard and stressful. Choosing the best fit for your situation can be an incredibly important decision to get the best outcome for long-term recovery. Finding the best providers that can deliver the likelihood of an encouraging future for one's health, safety, and favorable treatment outcome can prove difficult for most of us.

On National Drug and Alcohol Facts Week, scientists and other experts counteract the myths about drugs and alcohol that people get from the internet, social media, TV, movies, music, or from friends.

Simply make sure professional third parties have already reviewed the treatment program you are considering. This can make your selection process a little easier. Clearly verifying that your provider is able of delivering effective, licensed, and assessed treatment should be part of your evaluation process.

The Joint Commission, previously known as the Joint Commission on the Accreditation of Healthcare Organizations (JCAHO), provides its gold seal and stamp of approval only to select treatment centers. These healthcare providers must meet the Joint Commission guidelines and standards of quality care.

About The Joint Commission.

Established in 1951, the Joint Commission (JC) is an autonomous, charitable institution fighting to better healthcare for people by assessing numerous healthcare businesses. Its evaluation methods are designed to encourage treatment centers to provide top-quality, trustworthy, and competent care to clients like you.

The Joint Commission is managed by a committee of 32 members. Members include doctors, nurses, managers, health care authorities, instructors, and consumer advocates. The JC has area facilities in Illinois and Washington D.C. and engages over 1,000 employees.

Joint Commission Review Program.

The Joint Commission has certified and approved almost 22,000 health businesses and establishments in the U.S.A. The kinds of businesses it accredits start at treatment centers like We Level Up to hospitals, laboratories, and many more. The JC sets standards for the country's healthcare industry. Through the rigorous accreditation process, healthcare organizations can earn the Joint Commission's seal of approval.

Joint Commission Accreditation Process.

To become certified, treatment centers need to go through an on-the-ground review managed by the JC evaluation staff. To keep an accreditation, they review each treatment center at each three-year interval. Where additional examination and assessments of health care practices of the center are analyzed once again.

The review process is unbiased and data-driven. The JC evaluation concentrates on clients and the quality of care they are provided. The final purpose of the examination is set to answer two tasks. First, to determine if the business performing well and can be designated as a "good practice". Second, to provide direction to the treatment center to assure its clinical treatment team advances constant regular high-quality care.

Following the original review, treatment centers go through unannounced examinations about a year and a half to 3 years thereafter. The treatment center reviewed does not get any warning with no prior notice for surprise in-person examinations of their facilities. This guarantees the company examined is keeping good treatment practices continuously. Surprise visits are conducted directly by JC staff.

Thus, only when a treatment center obtains its official accreditation will it get listed on the Quality Check website. You will find its online directory for Joint Commission accredited companies at this JC website.

Independent On-the-Ground Accreditation Review.

Every on-the-ground examination applied the JC's Tracer methodology. This data analysis process applies actual client data to determine the applicable levels of care being provided at the treatment center. JC "Tracers" staff will actually watch clients progress throughout the whole therapy record to verify both the quality & performance of the treatment provided.

The JC Tracer methodology practice also assesses how the treatment center integrates care over multiple therapy & clinical functions throughout the entire treatment program.

In facility polls incorporates:

- treatment leadership observations
- client orientation to the programs
- competence assessment process
- facility review & care environment
- client exit surveys (survey team presents findings)

After the questionnaire, if the treatment center does not qualify for requests for improvement (RTFs), the treatment center accreditation can mature to an official seal. Where there are enhancements to be made, the treatment center must present a statement showing whereby they will enhance their care before they can join and qualify for JC official accreditation standards.

Joint Commission Accreditation for Consumers.

For consumers, the Joint Commission accreditation can help assure that a treatment facility has undergone a third-party comprehensive review. And that the treatment center meets the highest JC quality healthcare standards. Of course, where a particular treatment center is accredited, family members and their loved ones can weed out nonaccredited businesses. These are facilities that have not undergone the rigorous JC review audit. Through the JC clients will have a reputable nonprofit institution providing a robust review for treatment in a safe environment along with high-quality healthcare up to its data-driven analysis and satisfaction.

JCAHO accreditation can help you find:

- leading high-quality care treatment centers
- stringently reviewed more effective treatment therapies
- independently reviewed and qualified treatment center teams

Of course, while client quality of healthcare & safety is the central concept behind the JC accreditation, consumers should get more details. Clearly, JC verification is great for the clients and families, learning about customization of treatment can also be an important criterion when choosing where to go. JC, accreditation signifies your treatment center has been reviewed to constantly enhance the quality of care. And that clients can anticipate getting care in a stable, safe, and effective treatment setting.

JC Treatment Center Standards.

The JC complete accreditation method is based on specific criteria. These rules further lead evaluations to enhance treatment center execution of client care. The purpose of the JC's standards is to establish expectations for treatment centers that are measurable, logical, attainable, and can help lead to improving client care.

JC review criteria are appraised by the most advanced scientific analysis and refined with healthcare experts, treatment providers, and other business heads. Criteria are renewed as needed and may extend so to adapt to help improve treatment modalities.

The JC employs innumerable tests for treatment centers, like:

review and analysis of clients' previous treatment, response to prior treatment, and relapse experience after treatment aftercare client discharge support (client care should continue post inpatient treatment. We Level Up provides free aftercare client support activities, planning, and consultations) review of consistent levels of medication-assisted detox and treatment programs review of the client's history of behavioral, emotional, legal, and social consequences pre and post-treatment

The JC criteria and standards can be purchased on the Joint Commission Resources (JCR) website. JCR gives support along with other information to help treatment providers advance their effectiveness so clients can get improving levels of care.

Rehab Accreditation Impact on Recovery.

Each individual's recovery history and journey are unique. Thus, there aren't guarantees for a favorable outcome after treatment, regardless of accreditations. Clients ultimately must be ready and commit to their recovery once they leave treatment. In truth, clients are the only ones that can guarantee their recovery success at the end of the day. But, JC quality reviews of thousands of treatment facilities across the nation along with audits and demands for constant improvements offer real value to the recovery journey process.

Obviously, an accreditation from the JC shows a commitment to quality care and an investment in improving the care clients receive for long-term recovery success.

The We Level Up treatment center is 5-Star Verified with hundreds of Google Reviews. We've earned the trust and satisfaction of hundreds of recovered clients. Some of our clients have been incredibly gracious to share their personal recovery success stories online. Many have left us 5-Star Google verified client reviews.
