The high voltage capacitor market consists of sales of high voltage capacitors by entities (organizations, sole traders, and partnerships) that store charge and energy for use in high voltage applications. A high-voltage capacitor is a passive electronic component consisting of a cylinder, a flat cover or a semi-spherical envelope, a sealing element, and a few accessories. These low-loss and lightweight capacitors are generally used in oil for pulse shaping or peaking in large pulse power systems.

Technological upgrade of the old grid infrastructure is a key trend gaining popularity in the high voltage capacitor market. According to the high voltage capacitors market research, companies are upgrading and expanding the old electric grid to increase its capacity to move electricity from renewable sources of power and make the grid more resilient. For example, in 2020, the GridWise Alliance initiated its comprehensive "Policy Framework for Grid Investments in Economic Recovery" that specifically mentions the requirement for $50 billion in federal spending for grid modernization and upgradation. In December 2020, Cornell Dubilier Electronics, a US-based manufacturer of high-quality capacitors, acquired the high voltage capacitor production systems of NWL. This acquisition greatly expands Cornell Dubilier's capabilities in custom capacitors required for high-power lasers, military propulsion systems, inverters, and more. NWL is a US-based manufacturer of high-voltage AC and DC film capacitors.
