According to the seasoning and dressing market research, companies are adopting automation and artificial intelligence (AI) technology to maximize production efficiency. Robotic systems automate, batching, conveying, processing, storage, and packaging of products thus decreasing production cycle time and increasing output. AI incorporates novelty and creativity into the food by identifying a base formula for a flavor category. Automation enables seasoning processing companies to improve plant conditions, reduce contamination, minimal human interaction thus making processing safer for workers as well as consumers. Plants with fixed automation systems increase yields by at least 2-3% over workers. Kraft Heinz, Givaudan, McCormick, Ajinomoto, Kikkoman, Kerry Group are some of the companies that use food automation equipment. For instance, McCormick in collaboration with IBM Research is using AI to create new palatable flavors. Kraft Heinz has invested in robotics and artificial intelligence to implement automation and to reduce manufacturing inefficiencies.
